

Sherry Ahrentzen is Shimberg Professor of Housing Studies at the University of Florida (UF). Her research focuses on housing and community design that fosters the physical, social, and economic health of households.

She currently co-leads a multidisciplinary team at UF (“Vital by Design”) examining building performance for occupant health, particularly of residential environments for older adults. This team is one of the inaugural cohorts of the AIA Consortium of Design and Health Research.